145.00 436 Marcus Junius Brutus. Denarius. Head of Marcus Brutus to r. ℞ EID. MAR (Ides of March). A Liberty cap between two daggers. Slight planchet crack, otherwise very fine. Of the greatest rarity and as far as I know there is only one other specimen in this country, to the best of my knowledge never offered in an auction room here.

Julius Caesar was murdered on the Ides of March, which would be the 15th, or middle of the month, in the year of Rome 710. The actual day of the perpetration of the deed is marked on the coin in perpetual remembrance of the fact. After the murder of of Caesar in the senate house the conspirators marched through the city accompanied by a numerous band of gladiators and many associates, proclaiming liberty to the people and peace to all, declaring they intended no further violence to any one. Upon this occasion they were preceded by one of their attendants, who carried a cap, the emblem of liberty, raised on the point of a spear. Thus the cap on the coin refers to the freedom of the citizens of Rome having (been supposed to have) been gained by the use of the dagger, implying that the Roman people had been held in slavery by Julius Caesar, from which state of bondage they had been released and made freemen by the daggers of Brutus and his confederates.—Records of Roman History.
